The enemy was successfully driven back, his artillery silenced and the contest virtually closed in that portion of the field.	apprehensive that his position might be turned, and be cut off from an opportunity of retreating, if he should find it necessary, across the dam. His brigade fell back in line of battle, followed by the rebels, firing	stances of greater individual valor than were displayed on that memorable field. GENERAL JAMISON'S BRIGADE ADVANCE. General Jamison, having previously reported his regiments advancing, now came up with his brigade, and a second line was formed ready for any subsequent movement, but the fast approaching darkness prevented him from pushing forward. The first line of the train passed the position of the troops to participate in the action, though he himself had rendered valuable service in cheering on other regiments under a falling fire.

THE OPERATIONS OF THE RIGHT.

In the meantime the operations had extended further to the right. General Peck's command, of which I have previously spoken, was brought into action late in the afternoon near the point where the Yorktown road opens into the space in front. The One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania regiment, Colonel Booley, was deployed to

THE CHARGE.

The rebels were now within some forty yards, and General Hancock ordered an immediate advance of his entire line. This, it will be remembered, was com-

THE COURAGE AND BRAVERY OF GEN. HEINTZMANN.

General Heintzmann acted with a coolness and courage, when surrounded by danger, which attest anew his merits as an accomplished soldier. Not over pleasing in his manners in general intercourse, except with those with whom he is intimately acquainted, it is beautiful to see how his eye gleams with martial fire amid the excite-

was in the proportion of one in six, which is a proportionate loss to that of the Allied armies at the battle of Alma in 1854. No other battle in the recent European wars compares with it. The bloodiest battle in Napoleon's career, I believe, was the battle of Wagram, where the loss was one in eight. O-

The right of the road, and the Fifty-third New York, moved forward along the left flank of the rebel position of the principal portions of the Fifth Wisconsin, Sixth and Seventh Maine, Thirty-third New York and Forty-ninth Pennsylvania regiments, all about two hundred men. These regiments went forward bravely with alacrity, and, as they came close to the enemy, delivered a few volleys. Then General Hancock, whose politeness is equal to his bravery, gave the command—"GENTLEMEN, CHARGE!" And his gallant soldiers, with tremendous cheers—their ammunition was expended. The Ninety-fourth Pennsylvania, Colonel McCarthy, was thrown in front, and contended with the rebels until they appeared in larger force to the right again, in front of Colonel Boller's regiment. It was now quite doubtful whether General Peck could hold his position there. The Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania, Colonel Ballenger, was ordered forward; dashed down the slope. The enthusiastic spirit of the men seemed to be sufficient to frighten the opposing force, which was said by prisoners to be General Early's brigade, and, with the exception of three resolute rebels who stood to receive the bayonets, the line broke, and the rebels ran. Pursuing them down the slope, General Hancock's command halted and fired ten or twelve volleys at

It is an interesting subject for General Hooker and General Johnston, who confronted each other on that occasion, are old friends, fought side by side for the American cause in all the battles which took place in the basin of Mexico, and entered Chapultepec together. General Hooker has shown himself to be not only a pleasing gentleman, but an able officer.

GENERAL JOHN HANCOCK

the battle will have "Williamson's" inscribed upon their banners.

Dr. Franklin Ridgway, Assistant Surgeon of the Fourth regiment Cavalry Brigade, was on the field throughout the fight, attending to the wounded, and was himself twice slightly wounded, besides having his horse shot under him—but remained on the field. He was riding upon a fine Arabian horse, the horse of the late General

Some of the companies were out of supplies, and they were out of ammunition, but it was placed in position notwithstanding, and before night closed upon the conflict the brigade had partially succeeded in driving back the enemy. The supply of ammunition in the cartridge boxes having been expended, this brigade was relieved by other troops, which were placed under command of Gen. Devin on the right and Gen. Keim on the left.

GENERAL KEIM.
General William H. Keim, of Pennsylvania, of General Casey's division, was engaged actively in the battle, actually rising from a sick couch to participate therein. He was complimented by General McCallan for the services he rendered in rescuing General Peck's division when in great danger. General Keim's death was caused by a bullet which struck him in the chest.

The exposure he endured at this battle. He asked them if they were really so brave, that battery, and they replied that they would try it. They did try it, but instead of giving us the cold steel they themselves died at the sight of it.

GENERAL McCLINTOCK'S ARRIVAL ON THE SCENE OF ACTION.

Towards the close of the engagement it was the Prince de Joinville, I believe, who rode off and came back with General Hays's men, arrived with heavy casualties.

and tried to turn our retreat, and our flank, and the whole retreat advances gradually extended from left to right. The rain was still descending, as it had been all day. Gen. Hancock's brigade, which I have previously placed on our extreme right, remained in the position he took up when he crossed the dam, and occupied some of the evacuated earth works, while the German Troops, as I have previously mentioned, were ordered to the left of West Point, lost his life towards the close of the engagement, having previously lost a horse. With scarcely an exception, officers of the field and of the line behaved in the bravest manner, while among the file there were thousands of instances of individual prowess, most of which may never be widely known. And all those who conducted themselves commendably.

troops carried up the situation. Expected reinforcements not coming up in time, it was deemed more proper that he should fall back from his advanced position to the one he occupied at first, immediately after crossing the dam. Being occasionally engaged with the enemy, however, in order to avoid the bad effect which a retrograde movement on his part might cause, he held the position. Knowing his troops to be depleted in force, and

The fire near Fort Magruder, to the left, had now almost subsided, and rebel troops were observed moving in different directions. A force of the enemy's infantry filed a work which had remained unoccupied, and a body of his cavalry assembled on the plateau, apparently with a view of attacking the battery.
